Gregory Brown, originally a fisheries biologist, is an award-winning photographer/writer whose work has appeared in such publications as National Geographic, Time, Ocean Realm, Skin Diver, and Islands. Since 1984, he has logged hundreds of hours beneath the waters of Fiji. Recently, he became the first underwater photographer ever invited to exhibit his work in the art gallery of the National Wildlife Federation. This colorful companion gives you detailed descriptions and each dive site that include depth, visibility, currents, required expertise, marine life, and temperature.
